Focus on The New History Education

The New History Education helps students examine historical problems. They learn to read primary and secondary sources in a way that helps them think critically about the past. The result is a deeper understanding than comes from memorizing. Historians, well known master teachers, and a cohort of grant teachers will demonstrate how to dynamically weave content, analytical thought, and history standards into your packed history classroom schedule. Join us as we investigate and contribute to the state of history education today.

SESSIONS INCLUDE:

Content specific lectures and presentations by professors from San Jose State University's History faculty. Units and lessons designed by master teachers and graduate students will address state and national standards while implementing New History Education methods and New Social History perspectives on topics including:

- * Women's History
- * U.S. Diplomatic History
- * Political Trends of the 20th Century
- * Immigration and Diversity in Am. History
- * Historiography
- * Using Local Archives
- * History Day
- * Assessing Primary and Secondary Sources
- * ... And much, much more!
