

Gradual Release of Responsibility (GRR) in English Language Arts

Join us as we use Doug Fisher and Nancy Frey's book, Better Learning Through Structured Teaching, as a guide to develop comprehensive English Language Arts instruction

The gradual release of responsibility model of instruction suggests that the cognitive load should shift slowly and purposefully from teacher-as-model to joint responsibility, to independent practice and application by the learners.

Specific attention will be given to strategies to ensure access and opportunity for all students in the classroom.

Participants will be given time to collaborate with grade level peers in the development of lessons to start the year!
